Description of the Related Art In recent years, a project management system (PMS) and a task management system (TMS) have been used in construction or production activities. For example, data representing a progress state of a project or data representing information associated with a task is transmitted from a PMS server to a plurality of TMSs installed in the respective sites. The TMSs receive the data from the PMS server, and display the progress state of the project or the information associated with the task on a display unit (e.g., a display of a computer or a touch panel mounted on a mobile device) or print out the data on paper (e.g., a construction worker's logbook) by a printer (e.g., a construction worker's note-book or a construction worker's attendance management system (AMS)). Some TMSs are provided with display units or printers, and some TMSs receive data from other TMSs (i.e., local TMSs) and display the data on their own display units. In 570a42141b
