keymacro is an easy to use, fast, network based time tracker that keeps track of your hours spent on any application running on the remote system. Limitations: The application requires a VNC server to run. It's meant to track the hours spent on your local PC's application, but it is able to track the hours spent in any application that is on the remote server. However, it may take up to a minute or two for the application to load on the remote server, so you will need to keep the user's PC's app window open until all the system's apps are loaded, then close the window. It will track the local application's behavior and the system's memory usage, CPU usage and disk activity. Source code provided. KeyMacro is a very lightweight and easy to use time tracking application that does not require a local copy to run. Configure the application by defining a list of application and system events that you wish to log, and a list of files that you wish to load at the beginning of the session. The application supports: The session times, application events and system events that it tracks. The ability to run the application in different modes. The ability to disable the tracking of certain events, such as running applications, and a view mode that presents a list of tasks for each event. The ability to disable the system timer. The ability to track how much time was spent on each application. The ability to track the memory usage and disk activity.

Requirements: * Windows 2000, XP, Vista, or Windows 7. * VNC Server. * ICU and LibTASN1 are required. The VNC server should be started before the application is started. During the session, the VNC server must be connected. The application cannot run until the VNC server is connected. If the VNC server is not running when the application is started, the application will quit. How to use: * Click the start button. * Select the applications that you want to track. * Click on "Start". * When the application is started, click the "Status" button. * To start the time tracking, click "Start tracking" button. * The application will track the times and activities of each application. The application will log to file all the data that it collects, including the files, system and application events, CPU usage and disk activity. 77a5ca646e

What's New in the?

An application which keeps track of how much time a user spends on different types of activities on his computer. It allows to select and group the activities. One task may include multiple types of activities. A task is considered completed when a certain number of activities (minutes or hours) has been spent on it. Main features: Track how much time the user spent on different activities today. Create up to 25 different types of tasks. Group tasks by task types. Enable or disable an individual task. Set up different time intervals for task completion (e.g. 1 hour, 4 hours, 8 hours, 12 hours). Set up day, week, month and year time intervals for completion. Set up start time, end time and duration of each task. Print task lists and reports in various formats. Enable or disable the program while working on the tasks.

History: 11/19/2005 - Initial release
11/21/2005 - Added the ability to use several start times for individual tasks.
11/22/2005 - Added the ability to set up a task as complete when the total time spent on it reaches a certain value. 11/23/2005 - Added the ability to set up a task as complete if a certain number of activities are performed. 11/23/2005 - Added the ability to print out task lists and reports in various formats. 11/24/2005 - Added the ability to set up individual tasks for each day of the week. 11/25/2005 - Removed the ability to print the program name and the number of tasks when the task list or the report is opened. 11/26/2005 - Changed the icon of the program.
11/26/2005 - Changed the program name to Ease. Known problems: When a task is added, it gets the name of the last task added. This problem can be avoided by specifying a name in the task editor. The title bar of the task list is set to black even though there is no background image. To solve this, select 'None' in the Color tab of the Task List properties. Notes: Created by Vadim Somov.
