LOS ANGELES (Reuters) - California's legislature has passed the nation's toughest handgun legislation, raising the mandatory minimum sentence for people caught with guns during a shooting or other violent crime and giving local prosecutors the power to decide if repeat offenders should be prosecuted. FILE PHOTO: People push their way across the street during a stampede due to a threat by gunmen in the Westgate shopping mall, outside Nairobi, Kenya, September 21, 2017. REUTERS/Thomas Mukoya/File Photo The restrictions will take effect once Governor Jerry Brown has signed them into law. Brown, a Democrat who is vying for the party's presidential nomination in the November 2020 election, made gun control a campaign issue in the 2016 state election, pledging to raise the minimum sentence for gun use during a shooting from two years in prison to three. "In California, we work our hearts out for legal gun owners, but in an effort to prevent tragedies, we are going to aggressively and effectively punish those who abuse guns to murder and maim," Brown said. Earlier this month, Brown announced that he would use his authority under California's constitution to support restricting the ownership of ammunition magazines that can hold more than 10 bullets. Brown said he will also direct state agencies to address gun violence by beefing up background checks of people buying firearms, and outlawing the sale of guns to people who have been committed to a mental institution. This is the first time since the 1960s that any U.S. state has passed a strict gun control law following the highly publicized December 2015 shooting at a San Bernardino County, California, holiday party attended by 14 people, 12 of them fatally. Twenty-six people were arrested on suspicion of murder, and one of the suspects pledged allegiance to the Islamic State group, according to a federal law enforcement official. In New York, which already has strict gun control laws, the legislature last year passed a law that raised the minimum sentence for gun crimes from three to four years.
