Windows&iOS unite forces for Bluewave, built for touch screens Details: San Diego, CA, April 9, 2014 -- Bluewave Technologies, the leading application development and consulting group focused on the mobile and tablet market, and Microsoft today announced a partnership focused on delivering affordable and powerful applications built for touch screens. The Bluewave for Windows Studio and Bluewave for iOS Studio, which are available for pre-order today, offer the ability for developers to write apps for both Windows Phone 7 and Windows 8 as well as for iOS. Together, the studios deliver an integrated development experience from start to finish by using the same code base for both platforms. "As digital devices continue to evolve, we need to rethink the way we develop applications to focus on the user experience instead of viewing the world through the lens of a traditional application development model," said Raul Villalobos, chief executive officer of Bluewave Technologies. "Bluewave for Windows Studio and Bluewave for iOS Studio are the first in a series of Windows and iOS-based solutions developed for easy, rapid app development." The Bluewave for Windows Studio is centered on Windows 8, enabling developers to build apps that are touch-enabled, interactive and focused on the user experience. The Bluewave for iOS Studio is focused on iOS, which is the leader in the mobile application market and offers a leading user experience, speed and capability that was not available prior to iOS 5. Additionally, Bluewave for Windows and Bluewave for iOS Studio offer the ability to focus solely on Windows or iOS development on a platform-by-platform basis. These studios bring the power of Windows and iOS together, providing Windows developers with the tools to develop apps for iOS that are highly interactive and offer a great user experience, and vice versa, allowing developers to craft apps that have an iOS-like user experience on Windows, offering a consistent experience between the two platforms. "Bluewave Technologies has been a pioneer in the field of application development and its strategy to focus on Windows and Windows Phone 7 is clearly resonating with our customer base," said Julien Pin, general
