Image Processing _Image processing_ is the term used to describe the manipulation of an image to change one or more characteristics of the image. This manipulation can be as simple as adjusting exposure or contrast values or as complex as changing the orientation of an image or moving an object within the image. There are two main types of image processing techniques—artistic image processing and photoshop. * _Artistic image processing_ techniques, such as highlighting areas with a high contrast and using selective color, are used to enhance the appearance of an image. * _Photoshop_, or photoshop techniques, are used to make an image more appealing through a variety of techniques that make it easier for an image to be manipulated, changed, cropped, reduced, or increased in size.

[Myocardial hypertrophy in rats with abdominal aortic coarctation and hypertension, exposed to long-term hypervolemic hemodilution]. The effect of long-term blood volume depletion, evoked by chronic hypervolemic hemodilution (HHD) upon myocardial hypertrophy has been studied in rats with abdominal aortic coarctation (AAC). This has been associated with the development of hypertension (HT) in both AAC and HHD rats. The degree of the myocardial hypertrophy has been assessed by means of two-dimensional echocardiography and morphological features. Compared to sham operated animals, myocardial hypertrophy was obtained in AAC rats and was more intensive in HHD animals. On the basis of morphometric data one can conclude that the extent of the myocardial hypertrophy is related to the degree of the hyperfunction of the heart manifested by the increase in the mass of the myocardial cells, as well as with the degree of the increase in the volume of the left ventricle.
