CPGN is our homage to classic shooters, especially early 90's first person shooters, of the genre. Players will take on the role of the protagonist through the classic missions and kill the hard enemy, and they will kill them fast and always. It's core gameplay consists of heavy-on-the-action 1:1 button-to-action gameplay. No loading screens, no pointless delays between you and the game. The time that you can be spending waiting for every target to stop shooting is a time where you are not able to play the game. CPGN features an easy player control system with a wide repertoire of moves that will put any player to shame and the game graphics will give any player a much needed break from your daily rigors. All characters have accurate mechanics and they will feel like a real-life player with hitboxes and animation. Weapons and enemies are all randomized. Each game will have a different map, different weapons, different enemies and a different story. You don't get any skill points from killing people. We want to provide an experience that feels like playing an old game and certainly isn't trying to be the newest fad game with pixels that will be obsolete by the next day. The purpose of this game is to provide a completely "throwback" experience and have your foreheads call you an addict as you stand on your knees and beg for more. Accurate determination of triglyceride fatty acids by GC/MS analysis of their 2,2-dimethylpentadecanoyl esters. A novel GC/MS analytical method for the derivatization of triglyceride fatty acids and the simultaneous determination of their fatty acid residues (long-chain saturated, monounsaturated and polyunsaturated) is described. 2,2-Dimethylpentadecanoyl chloride (DMP-Cl) was used as the derivatizing reagent. A 4% water solution of DMP-Cl gave the best results. The relative standard deviation (RSD) of the proposed method is less than 3% for triglyceride fatty acids with the representative fatty acid composition of the palm stearin and tallow. The derivatization reaction of triglyceride fatty acids with DMP-Cl gave the unique methyl ester which was characterized by GC/MS analysis of the methyl ester. The reaction was linear in the range studied for all triglycerides analyzed. The effect of the reaction time, concentration of triglyceride fatty acid, water content of D c9d1549cdd

It's time to play the 4th Aviation Battalion, U.S. Air Force! Defending our Mission: As the World's first and only dedicated anti-submarine aircraft, the UH-1H Huey has served the U.S. Marines and Special Operations Forces with distinction for almost 50 years. In the jungles of Vietnam and now in the Pacific Islands, the UH-1H Huey has served U.S. forces in both peace time and war. Since the beginning of the Cold War, the Flying Tiger has been a mainstay of the western world's Special Forces, honing its skills in supporting American troops in some of the most inhospitable terrain on the planet. Design and Development: The UH-1H is based on the UH-1 Huey, a helicopter built on a Cessna aircraft. The UH-1H trades some weight, power and clearance for better ballistic protection, a faster speed, more fuel capacity and a much stronger landing gear. The cockpit is split, with the pilot sitting above the co-pilot. The cabin features four tandem seats with foldable seats, four ejection seats and a reticle director for the 20mm cannon. A wide-angle sight has been installed to provide more situational awareness. The Cessna T-model engine is upgraded to the Allison T-53 with it's constant speed governor and high efficiency Packard four-blade ACECO propeller, which provides more power and lower maintenance. The UH-1H was initially developed by the U.S. Marines as the UH-1P. The Marines began the program in the late 1950s with an order for 109 airframes with the Civilian variant. The Marine Corps delivered its first UH-1P helicopters in 1959 and 1962, with a total of 250 delivered to the Corps. In 1958, the Marine Corps ordered the UH-1P for the Army with a contract for 285 aircraft. UH-1P helicopters continued to be built and delivered until the early 1970s when production of the type was terminated. The UH-1H Cessna-based variant was then officially adopted in 1965. In 1968, a production contract for two prototypes of the UH-1H was awarded by Cessna, with the first prototype built in January 1969 and the second prototype following in October of the same year

By Andrew Robinson With the military's "Open Skies" initiative completed in 2198, the multinational, role-playing game StarForce 2193 faced the unknown. An unknown heading into what proved to be a time of crisis. For the new, open-ended campaign had begun with the first of several waves of "suicides" instigated by a disputed cult of hotepts. It was the autumn of 2198. The period between the winter solstice and the spring equinox marked the time that humans called "seasons." Throughout the century this period typically passed within a few days. As the year 2198 would end, starlight had only just begun to permeate a dark and stormy November sky. As everyone in the world sat down for their traditional family dinners, they were expecting to see themselves thrive during the five months of the Neutronium Sunrise. This was their time to bloom. Instead, it was as if a meteor had struck the earth and plunged civilization into a dark and fearful age. Eden, now in its tenth year of a critical technological and economic crisis, was a major victim of this catastrophe. Fecal fallout from a hostile alien race, now the retrovirus Sagittacysts, had decimated its population and industry. Industry as such was now almost non-existent. In fact, the planet was a shadow of its former glory. The only way that the tired nation could make it through its bleakest years was with the aid of the less-developed and technologically-conservative Mars and Earth. Earth's progressed nations could not and would not do so willingly. This was the time that small-time conflict theorists or role-players would envision as the new Cold War. It was a story that everyone knew, whether they knew it or not, but the backdrop of the story and the emotional consequences were always left unexplored by the Stellar Courts. What was obviously lost to the audience was that while humanity never did go to war with itself, it did at least lose some territory - and potentially, some freedom. The period, instruments, technologies, and weapons to challenge a sorcerous red-headed magic-user are all still in existence. However, the reason that few people remember the Sage Wars
