Comparison of two dosing regimens of cefoxitin in acute, febrile urinary tract infections: a prospective, randomized study. The efficacy and safety of cefoxitin in the treatment of acute febrile urinary tract infections were studied prospectively in 276 patients with single or multiple episodes of acute bacterial infections of the urinary tract in a multicenter, double-blind, randomized study. One of two cefoxitin doses (2 g or 4 g every 6 hours) was evaluated, each for 10 days. Clinical and bacteriologic responses were judged on day 10 for each patient. The overall clinical success rate for the 2 g and 4 g groups was 91.1% and 89.8%, respectively ($p = 0.57$) and bacteriologic success rates were 88.

More particularly, this invention relates to a holder for bags of food, such as bags of popcorn or other snack food products, and to a method of use for such a holder. Movie theatres and other entertainment centers often provide concession stands, which sell snacks to patrons of the theatre. Snacks may be sold in bags, for example, popcorn bags. Generally, a patron purchases a bag of snack food at a snack stand and takes the bag of food to an area in the theatre that has a comfortable seat. However, the typical procedure is cumbersome and time consuming. A patron does not always carry a bag to a conventional seat; often patrons will choose not to consume snacks while seated in a conventional seat. Instead, the patron will wait in line, often at a snack counter, to purchase additional snacks. A patron must pick up the bag of snack food and carry it, usually outdoors, to an area that has a conventional seat. A patron
