[...Lupus myopathy. There are few reports of lupus myopathy. Most authors describe clinical features which are similar to those of other muscular dystrophies. The finding of increased serum creatine phosphokinase (CPK) activity in these patients raises questions concerning the nature of the pathogenesis of the myopathy. Electron microscopic studies of muscle specimens have confirmed the presence of pathologic changes, but have not yielded clear answers regarding the exact nature of the muscle disease. Two patients with lupus myopathy are reported. One is a 15-year-old black girl with an 8-year history of arthritis, skin eruption, malar rash, hepatitis, and cytopenias. The other is a 45-year-old black male who presented with an acute onset of muscle weakness, severe systemic symptoms, and a 3-day history of fever and malaise. Both had symmetrical proximal muscle weakness, and both had markedly elevated serum CPK activity. Electron microscopic examination of biopsied muscles showed evidence of myofiber damage, but no membrane-bound bodies. These observations suggest that lupus myopathy is similar to idiopathic inflammatory myositis. It is possible that serum CPK activity elevation is a nonspecific response to pathologic muscle cell damage./ * This file has no copyright assigned and is placed in the Public Domain. * This file is part of the mingw-w64 runtime package. * No warranty is given; refer to the file DISCLAIMER.PD within this package. */ #ifndef _OMSECRET_H_ #define _OMSECRET_H_ #ifdef __cplusplus extern "C" { #endif #if defined(OMSEC_ON_CYGWIN) #ifndef _OSEMU_H_ #define OSEMU_H_ #ifndef _KERNEL_MODE #include #else #include #endif #endif #endif #if!defined(_WIN64) && defined(_M_ARM) #define OMSEC_ARM_ASM #endif #ifdef OMSEC

Personally I find this almost as much of a pain as in JS where I need to repeatedly format using semantically correct HTML? Better, IMHO, to just store the data. IMHO at least. ~~~ kefka Yes, there are many, many problems to debug with this in HTML/CSS. You'll have to put the styles into your source code, and remove the styles yourself from the end. And where is you link for your styles (bootstrap)? Where do I put my generated styles into your source? This is one of the many reasons I avoid using LESS and definitely CSS pre- processors. I have to do
