The game introduces new, high-intensity tackle animations that account for the physical, contact-based nature of the gameplay and showcase the upper body movements of the players in real-life environments. Improved running animation New dribbling animation Highly responsive AI (artificial intelligence) New heading controls New player movement New player movement implementation Players now move faster, more naturally Player movement is affected by their level of hunger, tiredness and desire Improved ball control New ball control system Ball control is based on player and ball behavior In the last season of FIFA Ultimate Team, players voted on the features they wanted to be added to FUT in the next major installment of the franchise. Of those features, "New ball control" garnered the most votes, as more than 65% of FIFA 18 players voted for its inclusion in the game. This fall, the ball control system is getting a major overhaul. The new ball control system will reduce long passes and increase the effects of ball control, enabling more skillful players to control the ball more precisely. Inspired by the system in PES, the ball will move between players' feet whenever appropriate, providing for more tactical play. Passionate players will be able to move the ball with great accuracy. The system will be in place for all players and will force them to play with the ball. The ball won't move on its own, but rather, it will move at the will of the player. The new ball control system works like this: Players can control the ball with their feet, hands, head, and body to make precise changes to the ball's direction and speed. Players can use their body to make the ball move through narrow spaces and through tight spaces like a tightrope walker. Players can use their head to predict a pass based on where a defender is playing the ball or where they think he might be playing it. When the player makes a head movement, the ball will change direction along that line (e.g. a passer might use his head to break free from a defender). In addition to making precise passes, the player can use the head to get the ball back, make a cross pass, or create a shot. Changing direction, attacking or rebounding. The ball can also be moved with the fingers:
