OUR FAVOURITE KIWI REVIEWS *AGG Before you start this game, you might want to check out why this game has the hatred symbol on it. One of the reasons is that a member of the Nintendo development team was being sexually harassed. They left the game due to this issue. Not only that, the developer used the word "sexual" for something that was intended as a joke, and the other characters also used that word in the same manner. It wasn't nice at all, and it made the Nintendo development team lose their cool. That didn't help any. This game has the hatred symbol, but don't worry about it. It shouldn't affect you at all, and if it does, you should thank the console. ----- BLACK/WHITE RACIST This game is shocking to some people. It shows the use of racial slurs and other forms of racism, and it shows a biased view of the Japanese. You'll find yourself in the presence of things you've never seen before, things that you're not used to seeing. You'll experience things that you're used to and see things that are more than anything you've ever seen before, and this game is set in Japan. Japan is considered a beautiful country, and much of the anime and culture of that culture are being misconstrued and misrepresented in this game. ----- FEWER WOMEN According to the wiki, this game is only offered on the Wii. The reason this game exists is because some men and women aren't being treated equally, especially in regards to women. The last game by Nintendo had a ratio of men to women of only 4:1. That game was "New Super Mario Bros U", and that game was a huge success. This game is taking things to the next level, with a ratio of only 2:1. We're not saying there's an abundance of sexism in this game, but you'll find yourself on multiple occasions thinking of why this game exists. ----- BIG MAN'S WORLD If you like Nintendo games, you'll love this game. Leopard The Clouded Leopard is a diurnal, heavily spotted cat which is endemic to sub-Saharan Africa, with a small geographic range in the Katanga Province of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. It is found in tropical forest that averages 1470 m (4,670 ft) above sea-level, including smaller forests at the margins. The thick undergrowth is supported by a dense canopy of 60 to 70 m. Its range includes Cunene and Copperbelt provinces, including an extensive range in eastern Katanga, extending to the Lake Mweru area and the Kitulo Range in Central Kivu Province. The rate of decline and loss of this species has been documented by multiple studies. Between 1980 and 1996, its total area of occupancy was reduced by as much as a third, and in 2005 the population was estimated at only approximately 3,000 individuals. War and poaching for the illegal wildlife trade, accompanied by agricultural over-exploitation of its habitat, are largely the principal threats to this species. As a result of these threats, it was listed as Least Concern in the IUCN Red List of Endangered Species as of January 2018.

Taxonomy Taxonomic history The Clouded Leopard was first documented in the 1920s, described as a new subspecies of the Pumé. The cat was later recognized as a distinct species. The group of clouded leopards is known as the jungle leopard, though it is sometimes conflated with the "southern jungle cat" or the "southern snow leopard" of the southern Indian Subcontinent, despite being absent in Asia. Its alternately phylogenetic placement in relation to Panthera genus is "tricky".

Anatomy The Clouded Leopard is the second largest of the jungle cats, reaching a shoulder height of 46-87 cm (18-35 in) and a body weight of 40-94 kg (90-200 lb). Like the other jungle cats, its claws are long, thick, and curved outward, with a palm-up claw stance. It is readily identifiable by its glossy, extended, soft, heavily blotched coat, with blotches of white, yellow, and burnt orange, on an off-white background, and the sex dimorphism of the coats, which is most pronounced in the offspring. It has a tree-climbing style of hunting. The clouded leopard has a
