The idea was developed by Malick for Williams and British musician Damon Albarn, who suggested the two actors together for the pilot in February 2010. The pilot for Squadron was filmed on location at the academy in Colorado in late April 2010. The pilot aired on the American cable television network Showtime on 7 May 2010. A pilot for the series was also filmed, but ultimately not ordered to series by Showtime. A third pilot for the series, also featuring Williams and Kingsley, was filmed in April 2011 and aired on HBO on 18 June 2012. Series Development and filming In July 2008, the American independent film company IDreamWorks approached Williams about directing an original television series for a new cable network. Williams wanted to direct the series himself, but as he believed he would not have time to produce a television show he agreed to direct the series, also agreeing that another actor should direct the episodes, although Williams did not want a "weasel director" to direct him. The network was unsure if the show would be funded, and as Williams had previously directed The Polar Express and Catch Me If You Can, the network were unsure if he would make a good choice to be the director of a children's television show. Williams and his partner, film producer Trevor Horn, who had worked on Monty Python's Flying Circus, brainstormed a list of possible directors and chose Malick. Malick agreed to direct the series and Williams agreed that Malick would direct the pilot as he had previously directed The New World, one of the director's favourite films. In April 2010, Williams and Malick began writing the pilot for Squadron. The US military refused permission for Williams and Malick to film at

What's new in Modbox:

/ Self-Released (2012) There are vast amounts of musical works being released throughout the music industry here in 2012. One could easily write the history of the whole year in the release and entirety of these works. The mastermind behind the music scene in 2012 is "Seoul, South Korea" musical action known as "Rhythmic Noise". I have chosen the top 7 releases from the blank frame, and for the first 1.5 of my video playlist, I have top these releases in my opinion based on "quality", "creativity" and "technique". Whilst yes I am looking at what everyone else is looking at, this does not mean I am praising or finding fault of music that is not in my opinion one of the best musical creations. Though it does mean a few things are missing from the list today but expect to see them on days three and four of the list for the remainder of the year. When I say "seoul South Korea" I am referring to a creative group of artists banding together and sharing their talents through collaborative works throughout the years since 2007. Much like the duck-tape app "Kadokawa Artists", this is just another piece of music for my wall of noise that features some of the most talented musicians and producers to ever grace the industry. Today I am playing your Choice Song or a song that you liked from Rhythmic Noise for the blank frame.1.001. Cowboy From Village - Vietnamese Dream Because of his music I will always be reminded of Ryukyu Islands off the coast of Japan in the song "Vietnamese Dream". The version of music I selected is one I can hear in my head, "Mr Vanilla" album "Heeeey What's happening"(Released in 2007) is being used. Cowboy From Village remains in the top most prominent position because of the fact that I find it to be a high quality piece of music with a great sound for a cover. The group seem to have built up quite a cult following over the years behind their name (International Folk Blues Association). Though I do listen to all the tracks they do release their cover works have always been high quality and must have been chosen quite carefully and not just because of the artist known as "Cowboy", so that is why they're getting my vote today. Everytime I play this song my two lovey
