If you are using Mozilla Firefox then you are using a browser that is vulnerable to Cross-Site Scripting (XSS) attack. Mozilla Firefox is vulnerable to Cross-Site Scripting (XSS) attack. By default when you access your web browser, your browser uses your computer's operating system to perform various security checks on the web sites you access. These checks are referred to as an "origin policy" or "origin security policy" by Mozilla. This serves as protection against attack sites, for instance, for example, such as malware, misuse of your data, click-jacking and DoS (Denial of Service) attacks. The origin policy scans the XML+HttpRequest (XHR) requests coming from your browser and filters out malicious ones by checking them against a comprehensive blacklist of URLs. If you are an Internet Explorer and a Mozilla Firefox users then you are using two different browsers that are vulnerable to Cross-Site Scripting (XSS) attack. Cross-Site Scripting (XSS) is most commonly known as an b7e8fd5c8

The present invention generally relates to semiconductor devices and more particularly to a semiconductor device including a bipolar transistor and a MOS transistor on a single substrate. With the increasing demands for high-density and high-performance integrated circuits, there is a growing demand for semiconductor devices that have high speed operation and high integration density. Such semiconductor devices may include bipolar transistors having high speed operation and MOS transistors having high integration density. In order to increase the integration density of a semiconductor device, a bipolar transistor and a MOS transistor may be formed on a single substrate as disclosed in Japanese Laid-Open Patent Publication No. 6-101698, for example. Japanese Laid-Open Patent Publication No. 6-101698 discloses a self-aligning method for providing interconnections between a bipolar transistor and a MOS transistor. FIG. 1 illustrates the conventional method for providing the interconnections between a bipolar transistor and a MOS transistor. Referring to FIG. 1, a plurality of buried interconnections 2 formed of polysilicon are provided on a substrate 1. The buried interconnections 2 electrically connect a base region of a bipolar transistor and an impurity diffusion layer formed on a gate electrode of a MOS transistor to each other. The base region and the gate electrode are connected to a conducting line 6. The conducting line 6 is provided in a row direction, i.e., a
