1. Choose Photoshop CS6 > Photoshop Elements or Adobe Photoshop CS6 > Photoshop Elements from the File menu. 2. Once you have opened the program, choose File > New from the menu to bring up the dialog box shown in Figure 3-1. The New dialog box that opens is a bit different from earlier editions of the software. For example, in Figure 3-1 the only area available to you for selecting a specific document type is on the bottom of the dialog box. However, in earlier versions of the software you could choose a category to filter your selection. In this chapter, we'll explore the basics of a new and improved New dialog box. Figure 3-1: To bring up the New dialog box, choose File > New. 3. Click the Format check box and then either open a new document or choose Files of Type. Select Photoshop from the drop-down menu, and then click OK to bring up a new document. The new document opens up with an entire blank canvas to work with. 4. In Elements, choose Photoshop > Edit > Edit in Photoshop CS6 or Photoshop Elements CS6 > Edit > Edit in Photoshop Elements CS6. 5. If you're in the right-hand file in the work area (the one you opened in the previous step), you can choose Edit > Clear All to clear the canvas of all the current layers. Otherwise, choose File > Close to close the document and return you to your file. Figure 3-2: The new New dialog box has a lot of new features. If you are using the left-hand file (the one you opened in the preceding step), you will notice that you can choose to close the image and return to the main Elements window. However, most people like to keep both the image and this dialog box open until all the layers are closed in the image and saved, and will usually close the right-hand file in the process. This is an easy process: 1. Use the Rectangular Marquee tool (shown in Figure 3-2) to select the entire canvas. * * * Important note Elements also allows for an Advanced mode for closing the right-hand file. Choose Edit > Close Window to return to the main Elements window and close the right-hand file. * * * 2. Choose File > Close to close the file, or click the small X in the top

The Elements' graphic design features are still powerful and it is a great app to learn Photoshop on the side. The following features have been sourced from Adobe Photoshop Elements. Shapes in Photoshop Elements are able to be used as both a vector tool and a raster tool. This allows them to be easily manipulated and can also be manipulated in a variety of ways. The following images are created using Photoshop Elements to show how the shapes can be manipulated, resized and scaled. How to change a shape's coordinates To use a vector tool on a raster file, select the raster layer and then go into the menu and select "Layer>New>Vector Layer." The layer will contain both raster and vector elements. 1. Make sure the correct raster layer is selected. If it's on the top, it's the very top raster layer and you need to create new layer over that layer. 2. Select "Layer>New>Vector Layer." If you want to create a vector layer but not over the raster layer, simply select the raster layer and click on the little drop-down menu next to the name of the raster layer. The option to create a new vector layer is available there. This screen shot demonstrates how to select a raster layer and then create a vector layer over that layer. How to use a shape tool With the shape tool, you are able to move shapes around the stage. You can also resize and scale shapes. To use a shape tool, first select the shape tool. 1. The shape tool allows you to resize the shapes on your layer or group of layers. To resize a shape, click on the shape tool. A marquee will appear around your shape. You can resize the shape by dragging the corners of the marquee. This screen shot shows how to use the shape tool to resize a shape. To enlarge a shape to fill the new space, click on the shape tool, or press the "L" key. 1. The shape tool will snap to the layer's edge. This means if you use the shape tool, it will always snap to the edge of the layer. 2. Click on the shape tool. The shape you clicked on will increase in size. If you want to resize a group of shapes, hold down 05a79cecff

What's New In Download Nik Collection For Photoshop Cc 2019?

Today's the day! A few hours ago, the US president signed an executive order introducing the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 (the RFRA). The implications are profound. The new law violates the principle of separation of Church and state, which has been inherent in the US constitution since the ratification of the constitution itself in 1788. It's no secret that Evangelicals have been using the 'not neutral' argument in recent weeks, trying to explain that they don't want to shut down abortion clinics (a common evangelical position), because they believe life begins at conception and that's not compatible with their beliefs on the abortion issue. The RFRA, a law which is meant to allow religious people to 'restore' the rights which the Constitution and Supreme Court have taken away from them (in this case the freedom to force people to pay for their healthcare against their will), will allow them to force all people to respect their religious beliefs. The law does not force people to support religious beliefs, it forces people to respect others' beliefs. The moment that someone gets a religious funeral for example, suddenly you won't be able to deny him the right to that: your funeral is a religious institution, and you won't be able to force him to attend a secular one. From a Christian point of view, that's unacceptable: there's no doubt that everyone has the right to believe in anything, but once one has public responsibilities, one also has public duties to others. And the Christian concept of the Bible is that the body and the soul are one, and to treat somebody's body like it belongs to you, is a form of violence against another human being. The only thing that surprises me is that the same people who are celebrating the absence of religious interference in their rights, are at the same time extremely upset that politicians are not interfering in their 'personal' issues like abortion and gay marriage. I understand that we have certain laws that protect us from all sorts of actions (like physical violence or taking away our right to money), but one's right to live is something that we all have as a common good. There should be no doubt that the state doesn't protect our right to live, for the opposite reason that it respects everybody else's right to live. Abortion and gay marriage are two areas where the right to live of people are not respected in the US, and the U.S. must act by respecting their right to have their own beliefs.
