? Just to lend some more context to this, my car is out of action (conveniently, I lost my gas cap) and I can not go into the Store on the Listage for a spare. So armed with my tired little Oppo, I decided to make a jaunt out to "Tiger Tank 59?" Break the fog? Because I'm a little weary of the Stock and have been too downhearted by the recommendation to date, I've been searching for another smoke that is quiet and made for the street. My existing smoke was the stock OPPO 5D MKIII. It is a beautiful little product and delightful to use. But, it has a massive footprint, and along with the apparently poor impression the stock mag left, I would like to have something more discreet. I ran crosswise to my mind's eye after seeing TB's nod to the 11 all-black Katana Nightblade. I felt the desire to have an all black KATANA smoke. Now no doubt about it, KATANA is about the same size as the MKIII. Except in stature. I would figure that the black Katana is supposed to tower in my pocket but, because of its size, it feels a bit light. It has an exceptionally low grip size. So I'm hoping that the Tiger Tank 59 will provide, well, a bit more "rock" in my hand. In terms of scent, I'm smitten with the stock glass diffuser on TB's smoke, but I have to admit I'm a bit partial to the dry-rubbed vanilla that Sephora offers. But based on what I know of the Katana, I can only assume that the stock OPPO diffuser (Scent Xchange) is supple and decently powerful in volume. What emerged, was that this smoke did indeed "balance" much better than the MKIII did in the hand, and it did sweeten the experience. This Smoke is supposed to last, and to be quite powerful. I didn't see the 11, nor the £110 price, on these two very small discs, but it would be easy to imagine that I could get a very nice smoke for the cost. (Other than the obvious JaDe Driver). So, in the hands, it indeed gave that same impression to me. It was in the bed of it's hand, not shy on power, yet it was very sleek in

I can confirm that I have played this VR game on HTC Vive. It runs very smoothly and it is extremely well done. In my experience, it supports 6 degrees of freedom. Good example of building a VR game is this VR tech talk: Official Website Steam Store I am not employed or associated with any entity pertaining to this game. The Spanish striker's debut proved fleeting as the Gunners suffered a chastening defeat at the hands of the Europa League holders Antonio Cazorla had to wait until just after halftime to make his Gunners bow, with the season-opener against FC Copenhagen being postponed in the aftermath of the tragic terror attack that took place in Paris. France have now wrapped up their participation in this summer's tournament, while the Spaniard is set to complete his switch to the Emirates by linking up with his new teammates for the remainder of the tournament on Sunday. London 2012 star Cazorla has been a miss for the Blues, having only just returned to action from a broken foot suffered in the Euro 2012 final against Italy, but it seems he will have no problems adding to the 33 goals he has shipped in 144 appearances for the Gunners since his £4.2million move from Malaga in 2010. Cazorla told FCK TV: 'If we have it, it's a fantastic opportunity. One that we should definitely grab. We'll try and win. We need to work hard and see what happens. 'Coming back from a long time out, obviously it's a big boost for the team. They'll give
