This post contains everything you need to know about Photoshop Elements as well as other tips and tricks to get the best from the program. Why use Photoshop Elements First, let's talk about why Photoshop Elements can be useful to you. Many people prefer the ease of use, simplicity, and power of Photoshop Elements over the challenges of working with high-end expensive pro-grade software.

Photoshop Elements is very powerful software and you can certainly use it for certain types of photo editing and design. It's great for beginners and is quite stable. That being said, if you want professional tools to create amazing work, Photoshop Elements is not the best choice. You'll be better served by hiring a freelancer to do the work for you and you won't have to worry about someone ruining your design or legal issues due to using the software. You may also want to check out Photoshop Elements Power Pack, a bundle of Photoshop Elements premium upgrades. How to use Photoshop Elements Whether you're a beginner or an intermediate photographer or graphic designer, here are some tips and tricks that will get you the best out of Photoshop Elements. 1. Work in layers Using Photoshop Elements is very easy. However, you have to understand the program by using layers in your images.

Photo editing and graphic design involve working with layers to combine, adjust, resize, and add filters to your images. Layers also work with resizing, cropping, and masking. In this post, you'll learn how to work with layers in Photoshop Elements. How to add layers in Photoshop Elements Open your image in Photoshop Elements or Elements. Press Ctrl/Cmd+Shift+I to open the Layers panel. Press the "New" icon to create a new layer. A new layer appears in the layer panel. Draw or click on a point on your image. Drag your cursor on the image and it automatically adds the layer to the layer panel. In the Layers panel, you have 16 layer buttons. Each layer button represents an active layer, and you can see the relative transparency of each layer by hovering the mouse over a layer button. You can name a layer with the Layers panel's name. Press Ctrl/Cmd+L to select the layer. Press Ctrl/Cmd+A to select the entire layer. 05a79cecff

2013-05-08 The real purpose of DDoS attacks is to put your site in a position where it can't fulfill the service requests it would normally handle for its normal users. In other words, the DDoS attacker is trying to force your site to close, even for legitimate users. You can use your site as a victim, if you are an attacker. For example, if you are attacking a site with your own name in it, you can use tools like DNS-RBL, Google, etc., to make sure the real name of your site doesn't come up in searches. If you're a legitimate site operator whose site has been attacked, you may wish to host your own copy of the site, for backup purposes. This might be a backup site with all of the code and data on a separate server. This is not a hosted site, however; if a hacker compromises your site, and views the source files, your backup site will be compromised, too. Some "mirroring sites" host multiple copies of a single site. A hacker may not be able to access a particular site, but they can still use a mirroring site to gather information about it. If a hacker wants to exfiltrate confidential information (e.g. bank account numbers) from your site, then they will likely try and compromise your site instead of going to your bank directly. Some of the attacks against major banks involved mining for login information from the site of the bank they were attacking. If you are the legitimate owner of a site, a hacker can get more information about your site by viewing the source code. This can be more convenient than constantly pinging your site for information about it (which makes you an easy target). Hackers can also use the information found in the source code to test how efficient their attack will be. If you are the legitimate owner of a site, you may wish to also host a copy of it on your own site, if only to protect yourself and your users from a compromised site. "Port knocking" is a method to protect your server's operating system from network scans. A client on the network requests a particular port or ports to be opened on the server, which is typically indicated to the client by the request the client makes. A key exchange mechanism is typically used, so that the client and server know that they're talking to each other. The port may be used in conjunction with a private
