The present invention relates to a reference potential source for detecting the contact of a conductive part in high electric field, such as a semiconductor device, in a manufacturing process, a probe for detecting the contact, a reference potential source and a reference potential source inspecting method. Conventionally, when a contact of an object, such as a semiconductor, occurs, the electric potential of the contact part is detected by a contact detecting apparatus, such as a probe. In this case, the contact detecting apparatus is brought into contact with the contact part. The electric potential of the contact part, on which the contact detecting apparatus is brought into contact, is detected, and it is determined whether the contact part has occurred or not. As a result, a probe for detecting the contact, a reference potential source and a reference potential source inspecting method, are known. One example of the probe for detecting the contact is disclosed in JP-A-7-260413. The probe for detecting the contact has a conductor that contacts an object to be measured. The conductor is, for example, a cantilever or a blade. The probe for detecting the contact has a pair of resistance elements that detect an electric current supplied from the reference potential source via the conductor in case that the conductor contacts the object to be measured. The contact of the conductor to the object to be measured is determined by

In separate studies, we found that the addition of the antioxidant N-acetylcysteine (NAC) abrogated the TNF-induced accumulation of DMT1 in the plasma membrane of THP-1 cells (data not shown). TNF-stimulated DMT1 internalization is in line with the enhanced iron uptake induced by TNF in both cells (Figure 6[#F6]{ref-type="fig"}C) and primary monocytes (Figure 7[#F7]{ref-type="fig"}). Our data provide evidence that the pro-inflammatory cytokine TNF induces the recruitment of DMT1 from an intracellular pool to the cell surface. This is consistent with the observed upregulation of DMT1 protein expression, but also its enhanced plasma membrane localization, following TNF challenge. In fact, as shown by immunocytochemistry, TNF markedly enhanced DMT1 localization in the plasma membrane (Figure 5[#F5]{ref-type="fig"}A). Furthermore, DMT1 (total and membrane-associated) protein levels were significantly increased in TNF-stimulated THP-1 cells when compared with unstimulated cells (Figure 5[#F5]{ref-type="fig"}B). Interestingly, TNF-stimulation was able to enhance intracellular DMT1 levels in primary human monocytes (Figure 7[#F7]{ref-type="fig"}), a finding that can be explained by the increased expression of DMT1 mRNA induced by TNF (Figure 8[#F8]{ref-type="fig"}A). Therefore, the increase of DMT1 protein observed in THP-1 cells is due to increased expression and stabilisation in the cytoplasm. Recent studies have described the role of the 3'-untranslated region (3'-UTR) and 5'-UTR of the *DMT1* gene in post-transcriptional gene regulation [\[\[@B18\],\[@B24\],\[@B25\]\]](#). For example, the increased stability of the *DMT1* mRNA was linked
