Note If you don't see the Levels dialog box at the bottom of the Enhance menu in a Elements window or in an open Photoshop document, click the View Show Levels button. * To create or alter a color, click the appropriate icon and drag it into the Levels dialog box. These icons represent the levels of the four colors in the Levels dialog box. Figure 14-1 gives an example of the icons. * If you don't see the dialog box launcher at the bottom-right corner of the Levels dialog box, click the dialog box launcher that's next to the Options button. The dialog box opens and changes to look like the one in Figure 14-2. Figure 14-2. The Levels dialog box with three steps and one sliders that control the intensity of the three colors. The leftmost slider's _Up_ icon represents the leftmost color channel (the red color channel). On top of the left slider is the green color channel icon. The middle slider's up and down icons represent the cyan and magenta color channels. Below the middle slider is the yellow channel icon. The overall _Up_ slider represents the brightness of all of the colors combined (the sum of all four color channels). The rightmost slider's up and down icons represent the contrast of the three color channels. Below the rightmost slider is the opacity slider. (A light background may make the opacity slider seem more prominent than it is.) By default, Photoshop has a value of 50 (50 percent) for all the sliders. This means that half of the colors are too bright (above 50) and half are too dark (below 50), and the majority of the colors are too light (above 50) or too dark (below 50).

New York City Public School Teachers Union (NYCPSUTU) President Michael Mulgrew shared his views on the teacher evaluation system, which is being called the most radical in the history of public education, to the Urban Teacher Network's (UTN) national conference last week. A long-time NYCPS student, Mulgrew blames the union's about-face on the teachers, including union president, who, he says, bought into Chancellor Carmen Fariña's plan. "Almost every member of the contract negotiating team signed a contract that made this happen," Mulgrew told the UTN's New York State Council conference. "It's not the fault of the members." Mulgrew says that if one wants to blame somebody it's the chancellor who, he says, "knows that she has no clout." Teacher evaluations are usually "a bake-off. They're subjective," Mulgrew says, and that's why the current system is a problem. He says that the DOE is putting forth a plan for "doing away with the evaluation process completely." "We're being told it will create a level playing field. But when you're telling the kids that they're all the same, then they're not taught anymore. They're not dealt with as individuals," Mulgrew says. The evaluations are so subjective that, he says, principals can steal teachers based on the value of their evaluations. "The problem is that the DOE thinks there is no problem," says Mulgrew. "They're not open to changing the way they're running the schools." "The chancellor is sticking to her guns, and this isn't going away." Mulgrew's comments came as more than 200 students chanted "whitewash, whitewash" at the attendance section of the conference, echoing similar student protests from last year.Devan's Video Recaps Scott's Escape From Devil's Island Posted Sep 20th, 2015 08:53 PM Twitter Tweet of the Day: Speed Forum's final round in the "We're Having

Q: How to add a dataset to d3.js I'm trying to make a visualization of a large set of Wikipedia articles. The articles are being written each day and I'm using jQuery's AJAX to update the pages. I have created an object that stores the articles using these patterns: { "id": "articleID", "description": "Article description", "image": "articleImageURL" } I'm using d3.js to plot graphs, but I'm not able to add my new data to the graph. I'm new to d3 and I'm not sure how to do this. Any help would be appreciated. Thank you. A: I'm using d3.js to plot graphs, but I'm not able to add my new data to the graph. You just need to extract the data from your object and add it to the path. var article = { "id": "123", "description": "Article description", "image": "" } var svg = d3.select("#my-chart"); var path = svg.append("g").attr("id", "my-chart").selectAll("path").data(article).enter().append("path"); path.attr("d", line); Where article is your object. I'm not sure how to do this. The above is a typical way to add elements to a d3.js chart. If you want to update d3.js charts in real-time, you'll need to use a queue solution (there are several on the internet). Sperm competition and the evolution of sperm-egg recognition. Female sperm competition requires sperm of the sperm from her own mate to fertilize her eggs. In many dipterans, such as Drosophila, cockroaches and mosquitoes, the males inseminate successive females and mate with them. The eggs from the first insemination are destroyed by the female's sperm and sperm use cues of the female's eggs to direct the second insemination. Many dipterans have developed elaborate sperm competition tactics which allow males to use cues such as female anatomy to determine which of two females a male mates with. These

How to Install IMPORTANT: before you start, you need to download the firmware for your current GPU. This is a separate download from the usual Catalyst Control Center installer: If you have downloaded this separate download, it's up to you to find the downloaded file and place it somewhere in your 'Downloads' folder (in Windows), or wherever you usually save downloaded software on your Mac; If you have not downloaded this separate download, skip to the next section. If you have the correct GPU, you should now have a
