Created on the day of my first wedding, this graphic was used a while ago to preview the fonts that would grace the wedding programs and on many of the invitations, many of which are now my most-worn wedding invitation and two anniversary card designs. That was how I started — doing what I love, and making cards for friends and family. At the same time, I've been fortunate enough to work with a lot of talented designers. I've been fortunate enough to make friendships at art shows and local markets, and to run into folks from all over the world at local shows. I'm happy to be able to do what I'm doing, and I look forward to sharing more samples and helpful techniques with you in the future. To see more of my work, including wedding invitations, holiday cards, wedding stationery, samples and more, check out my portfolio at the link below. Welcome to Crafted By Kate! A Family Affair I'm Kate, and together with my husband (and best friend for nearly 25 years), we're setting up a blog and doing some things in the scrapbooking and crafting world called Crafted By Kate. Crafted By Kate is about what I'm creating, what I'm creating with, what's happening with me and my family, and what is happening for us in the scrapbooking and crafting world. I'm a very lucky girl. My husband, Eric, is more than my best friend. We get along so well and have been together for longer than I can remember. We've been married for almost 18 years and my son, Jaden, is still a child of about 10, just like when we first met. He makes me laugh, makes me sad, and makes me stronger. As a child of the 90s, I was raised on the classic I Love Lucy Show, the Maxwell House coffeemaker, the Polaroid camera, the Chapstick, and the McDonald's happy meal. As a teenager, I was inspired to pursue art by the greats such as Norman Rockwell and Norman Rockwell's wife, Leonore. I had seen and painted many things at school, but it wasn't until my sister taught me about art and her connections with the art world that I found the beauty in art. I continued to be

1. Field of the Invention The present invention generally relates to a wireless communication method. More particularly, the present invention relates to a method of allocating a temporary identifier (ID) to a radio terminal at a wireless communication system.

2. Description of the Related Art Recently, many researchers have started to pay attention to Bluetooth low energy (BLE). BLE is an IEEE 802.15.4 based technology and is also called Bluetooth Smart. The BLE is a proprietary technology of Bluetooth communication, developed by Bluetooth SIG (Special Interest Group). The BLE is expected to provide a new wireless connection solution different from the currently available wireless connection technologies. According to the BLE specification, a basic mechanism of the BLE is to reduce power consumption by using a BLE device as a peripheral device. FIG. 1 is a block diagram of a general wireless communication system including a BLE device. Referring to FIG. 1, in a general BLE communication system, a BLE device 10 is called a peripheral device. In a case where there is no connection with other devices, a connection with the BLE device 10 is established and a peripheral device 11 sends and receives information to and from the BLE device 10. FIG. 2 is a block diagram of a general BLE connection. Referring to FIG. 2, in a case where data transmission and reception between a BLE device (or a primary device) and another device (or a secondary device) is not performed, a media access control (MAC) layer of a BLE device stores a temporary identifier (ID) for a connection of the primary device and the secondary device in a MAC header of a received packet. The MAC layer of the BLE device notifies the primary device that the corresponding BLE device is currently connected by sending information including the temporary ID via the connection. The primary device demodulates the packet and reproduces the information including the temporary ID from the demodulated packet. The primary device controls a connection
