and painting for the beginning of svp run. Tent ponchos were also coming out of their basements in various ways. Some people made small tents out of old sheets/towels and a paracord rope or piece of nylon rope, others also made tiny "tent" ponchos from regular cloth. Accent colors on tents in the most general sense were towards bold or bright. But in more specific terms, it was red, yellow, orange, green. When worn alone, a person would see some type of color contrast. However when combined with a poncho, a person could have a more textured and clashing look. "I've always liked the color variation more than the pattern variation," says Kim. So the clashing of patterns and colors between ponchos and other clothing is a theme. People also had a "less is more" approach to clothing. This was mostly seen when people put on a bow tie or had some type of "twin-set" going on. Bow ties and twin sets are worn as outerwear, so when the rain came in, people were able to take off their outer layer of clothing and put on something that was more weather appropriate. Also for the ladies, there was a large range of "backless dresses." "Backless dresses are one of my favorite items to wear in the rain," said Kim. "They allow for ventilation and are extremely comfortable." Backless dresses offer a lot of freedom for movement, especially when wearing them in the rain. There is also a lot of variety in materials, so you can find backless dresses in microfiber, silk, silk satin, cotton, etc. If a backless dress was tied up, many options to wear it. In general, women dress more conservatively in the rain, compared to men who tend to have a more laid-back outlook. "I haven't seen a man wear a backless dress," says Kim. "However, everyone had rain covers to protect themselves from the rain." Do men typically wear rainco

Alexi Pappas USA TODAY Sports FREMONT, Calif. – The tiny town of a quarter-mile square wouldn't have the population of a typical college football town, if not for the gritty athletic program that has been winning for 35 years. Fremont is where all the winning ends. It may not be the bigger name program, but it has produced two college basketball national champions (the other being Chico State in 1981) and 20 Olympic wrestlers who went on to become World Champions. And all this winning has earned the small corner of California the nickname "Death Valley." "It's just the impression of it in the community, but it's all relative," said Brian Clark, 61, Fremont's mayor. "Winning has been a consistent staple here for 35 years. So, it's not just that we're just winning now. There's a tradition here." Twenty-four. Twenty-five. Twenty-six. Twenty-seven. The number of national championships won by Chico State since the early 1980s is truly impressive. But these are not the only college athletics town in the nation. There is Butler, Kentucky, and Xavier, the two Catholic schools that have won the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) Division I basketball national championship in the last two seasons. Boise State has won the Division I football national championship in 13 of the last 19 seasons. And the University of Nevada, Reno, is the home of the new American Athletic Conference, which will begin play this fall as one of the "big six" for the sport. So even though Chico State's national championships have spawned more headlines than the other three schools combined, Clark says he's not offended by the attention the Rams are getting. He understands. "It's a much harder thing to do," he said. "You get attention because your program is good and it's more visible." And so, because of this visibility, the 32,000-student college campus and its athletic program have become much more than a one-time event, the school's chancellor likes to remind the student body. "Our graduates go on to do so much, go to the Olympics, get to Harvard and become doctors, lawyers and tech people," said Chancellor Jane Close Conoley. "It's not just in basketball. That school is on the map now." For decades, Ch
