The effect of triglyceride-lowering treatments on postprandial gastrointestinal hormone responses. Postprandial release of ghrelin, PYY and GLP-1, and the effect of lowering triglyceride levels, were studied in vivo in healthy subjects and type 2 diabetes mellitus patients. Thirteen healthy males and 18 patients with type 2 diabetes mellitus participated in the study. Oral fat tolerance tests were performed in eight subjects on each of three occasions: (1) on control treatment; (2) on an exchange diet low in saturated fat and high in monounsaturated fat; (3) on treatment with gemfibrozil. Plasma concentrations of ghrelin, PYY and GLP-1 were measured during the tests. Total plasma triglycerides and non-esterified fatty acids (NEFA) were measured for determination of the effects of lowering these lipids by the treatments. In healthy subjects, ghrelin was significantly suppressed after the test meal on control treatment but not on exchange diet. PYY showed a significant delay in appearance after the test meal on gemfibrozil, but not after the test meal on control or exchange diet. GLP-1 responded to all three treatments. In type 2 diabetic patients, ghrelin was significantly suppressed after the test meal on control and exchange treatments, but not after the test meal on gemfibrozil. PYY showed no significant difference between treatments. GLP-1 showed a significant delay of response on gemfibrozil, but not on control or exchange diet.
