[Acute encephalitis syndrome: Clinical features and neuroimaging]. Acute encephalitis is an acute neurological syndrome with a high morbidity and mortality. It can be divided in infectious and non-infectious etiologies. Several viruses are associated with acute encephalitis such as herpes virus, enteroviruses, paramyxoviruses, rabies virus, and, more recently, human coronaviruses. Brain imaging is mandatory to differentiate encephalitis from neurological or psychiatric disorders and guide aetiological diagnosis and contribute to an improved prognosis.Q: SOAP calling in C++ Possible Duplicate: C++ - calling SOAP service? I'm fairly new in C++ but I've been using Python and Jython to call SOAP services in the past. I was wondering what the equivalent would be in C++ with either Qt or Boost? I can't find any tutorials that explain how to do this. I was hoping that someone here can help point me in the right direction. A: I'm not sure what SOAP services you are talking about, but for.NET/C++/XML parsers the easiest way is to use libxml2 and "simply" use it's DOM parser. So you could do something like this: int main(int,char*[]) { // Setup xmlDocPtr doc = NULL; xmlCharEncoding encoding = XML_CHAR_ENC

Norton SystemWorks can be very useful in helping Norton products run properly..Chromatography columns, e.g. high performance liquid chromatography (HPLC) and capillary electrophoresis (CE) columns are typically utilized in analytical chemistry for sample processing. A typical HPLC column includes a column body having a central lumen to which a needle or the like can be removably affixed for effecting transfer of samples to or the transfer of samples from the column. The lumen is typically cylindrical in shape and has a diameter of about two millimeters or less. A suitable needle (e.g., a syringe needle) is typically affixed to the column through a hub integral with the body. The needle is axially movable relative to the column body between a first position, where the needle penetrates the body to establish fluid communication between the needle and the column, and a second position, where the needle is withdrawn from the body. To sterilize the needle prior to using, the needle is removed from the body and sterilized by way of a wet cleaning process or the like. The design of such column apparatuses is subject to several constraints. For example, a typical HPLC column may have a length of about 25 centimeters or less, and the internal diameter of the lumen may be about 2 millimeters or less, resulting in a very small fluid flow channel with a relatively small volume. Such a flow channel is convenient for control by a syringe needle. However, the small volume of the channel is subject to being contaminated by a sample fluid inadvertently or otherwise transferred to the column during the course of operation. In the event such contamination occurs, the contamination must be removed prior to further processing. Fluidic manifolds have been devised to facilitate handling of relatively large volumes of fluid. Typically, such manifolds have a pair of fluidic inlets and a fluidic outlet, with
