Most times the young guitar player is content to toil away, towing the band to a blissful – if not operatic – jam session at the end of the night. “You could hang out with me for an hour and we’d get more out of it than you get hanging out with a song for two minutes,” he says. But Giuramente is looking to change. He wants to see “more creativity than how it is now.” He wants to see “more off-time, more jamming, more playing around,” he says. With “one foot in the grave,” he’s looking to give up the grind of touring and the very real responsibilities that come with it. And he’s looking to find the place where he feels the music. “That’s my goal,” he says. “My ultimate goal is to be able to play music that I enjoy and I feel, while playing it.” When he started playing, most of his guitar heroes were “poor people” who’d toil away and only get paid in beer and cigarettes. He didn’t want to be a poor man. It’s in that life of poverty that he comes across the songs he wants to play. “People that work jobs are often not getting paid or they have jobs where their pay is very low,” he says. “Music is something that soothes and relaxes.
