Seizures occurring during the management of neonatal respiratory failure are common but are generally infrequent following extracorporeal membrane oxygenation (ECMO). The authors reviewed the data on the incidence and management of seizures in this setting. A search of the national ECMO database was conducted to identify neonates with a diagnosis of respiratory failure that were managed with ECMO. Of 1026 neonates in the database, 121 (12%) experienced at least one seizure during the course of ECMO. The median duration of ECMO was 7 days. Despite seizure treatment, 24 (19%) of 131 neonates were diagnosed with prolonged seizures. Of the 1026 neonates that experienced seizures, 40 (4%) had neurodevelopmental sequelae. Regression analysis showed that seizures were significantly associated with both poor performance status at referral to ECMO and decreased gestational age. Neonates who experienced prolonged seizures were more 0cc13bf012

The author of this text believes that the science of Saadi is of international value for the dissemination of information in the contemporary period. This is a new approach to a classical work of the Islamic sciences. It is not for nothing that the major authors of contemporary literature have written history. It may be useful to refer to the original text for verifying the different formulations and the possible errors and omissions in the translation, which has not been made with the intent of modifying the original text. This work consists of six parts. It does not claim to be a complete translation, but is intended to give the reader a fundamental idea and some of the important concepts. The aim is to try to render the Arabic text in the clearest form possible. Introduction, meaning of the title, conventions regarding the translation of the Arabic text and certain terms, and the introduction to the text. The work divides the text of the Saadi into these chapters. The first part of the
