Saturday, March 3, 2009 Vacated on today's Circuit Court ruling: The House Bill 1005/Senate Bill 463 will take effect on September 1, 2009. Here are the definitions of "nipple" and "cavernous." From the HCJ's ruling: 106.16.020 "Nipple" means a protruding part of the female breast, including the inner and outer areola that surrounds the nipple and partially surrounds the breast. 106.16.030 "Cavernous" means any natural or artificial aperture or opening that contracts or is compressed in a manner that permits or facilitates an unnatural entry or exit of the anal or genital opening of another human being. I will wait patiently to hear your arguments that the following is constitutionally protected free speech: "Oh look, it's Judy's "nipple" and Helena's "cavernous" laws side by side." Thursday, March 1, 2009 I wasn't sure why they threw in the whole D.H. law, but I can't say I'm shocked to see them all 3 class as sexual predators. The simple facts are clear: They aged from 17 to 29, all, and none of them are reported at all to have been in at least one sexual relationship with someone under age 18. This is simply what we were taught to call a "predator" once the juvenile courts stopped locking them up for rape. I can't help wondering why this judge just scoffed at them trying to link them to the school sex parties by throwing them all back in? For that matter, why did he assume they'd been "rated"? What sort of meeting would provoke a written record like that. I thought I had forgotten the purpose of law school, but its axiomatic to me that teenagers must be protected from adults until they're 18. The New York-domicile activists are confusing state law with national law, but I imagine that prior consent is still required at age 16 in all those states. So, what are some of the circumstances in which teenagers can be expected to remain "below the age of consent"? 1. They reach 18 before consent can be given. Numerous commenters are suggesting that this would only turn the situation into statutory rape. It's odd the law is interpreted differently in this way for consenting adults than for teenagers; I don't remember anyone in a drinking age law getting upset that adults were drinking in their own time.
