Deaf families' experiences of using hearing aids: a systematic review protocol. The aim of the present review is to examine research undertaken on deaf families' experiences of using hearing aids, to examine the experiences of deaf families in using hearing aids, and to examine how family-centered interventions can be developed to increase and improve the experiences of deaf families in using hearing aids. A systematic review. Literature databases were searched (CINAHL, Medline, EMBASE, Cochrane Central, CCTR, ERIC, Web of Science, and ProQuest Dissertations and Theses). Reference lists and dissertation sites were used to find additional studies. The search strategy included literature and gray literature published between April 2007 and November 2017 and screened for articles that included the following keywords: deaf, hearing-impaired, hearing-impaired family, hearing loss, hearing impaired, hearing help, hearing impaired and family. In addition, a manual search of references from included articles was performed. The screening process for inclusion was informed by a sample of included articles using the inclusion and exclusion criteria. All literature that was screened was included. A narrative review is performed to summarize the findings from this review. The experience of using hearing aids for deaf families is a unique experience in that the hearing impaired family member is a co-designer of the device. The experience includes: the use of technology; the importance of family; the goals of using the device; and the roles of the hearing aid supplier, the hearing aid dispenser, and the hearing aid user. The experience of using hearing aids for deaf families is varied and unique because the experience is based on the needs of the family. Most evidence is based on controlled trials, but there is a need for longer-term evaluations of these interventions.

Human need for lifesaving products was solved mainly within the 20th century, even if the pace of development has not been even yet. Technical progress in medicine is even more recent. The first step in modern medicine was the discovery of the circulation of blood from the new dogma, provided by Harvey, in 1628. By the time Salk and

Sabin invented the first oral polio vaccine, the discovery provided more human lifesaving than any other product and the invention of the first polio vaccine, a discovery, the second polio vaccine and a vaccine against human papilloma virus in recognition of which the Nobel prize in physiology or medicine was awarded in 2007. The surgery safety was a revelation in the 20th century, when Lister, beginning in 1865, described use of antiseptics in surgery, which was the first surgery innovation that proceeded almost everywhere in the world. The development of antibiotics started a few years later. Another innovation in surgery was introduced by Seldinger and Weiss in the 1930s. The most recent process of life-saving product development is the recent discovery of cure for hepatitis B and treatment of AIDS.Q: Changing 0cc13bf012
