A: In your first example buffer is a double-pointer, pointing to a buffer of type unsigned char * (i.e., unsigned char [4096]), pointing to the memory location where the string "123456789012345678901234567890123456789012345678901234567890123456789012" is located. In your second example, buffer is a single-pointer, pointing to a memory location of type unsigned char, holding the string "12345678901234567890123456789012345678901234567890123456789012". When you pass a double-pointer to a function (i.e., that stores the address of
