I am using 3 databases on my application (Postgres, MongoDB, MySQL). And i want change the User that will login to each database. There are many tutorials about configuring JdbcUsers on MySQL and MongoDB only. Is it possible to use @ConfiguringJdbcUsers with multiple databases? @Component public class Connector { @Autowired private DataSource dataSource; @Value("${database-1.driver:org.postgresql.Driver}") private String database1Driver; @Value("${database-1.url:jdbc:postgresql://localhost:5432/examples-1}") private String database1Url; @Value("${database-2.driver:org.postgresql.Driver}") private String database2Driver; @Value("${database-2.url:jdbc:postgresql://localhost:5432/examples-2}") private String database2Url; @Autowired @ConfiguringJdbcUsers("database-1", "TEST", new JdbcUser("postgres", "pass") {

If I may suggest, use the Define Text command to create a text box next to your button with a width of 100px, and then use the text box to create a style for your button. So in the steps above I created a text box and, in the new editing window, dragged the text box into it and as you can see the text box has a width of 100px. Then I used the button style "button:Custom" to create the button style.

So, in the button control, I right-clicked the "Go" button and selected "Create button style". After that, I right-clicked the new button style and created a new button. I wanted the button to have a red background color so I clicked the button style properties tab and clicked on the "Customize Style" button. I then simply made the red color a little darker and changed some of the other text style settings to look like the buttons on this website: (The button style is named "style:Medium") Now, using the same button as reference, I created a new button style from that button style and made the changes in the button control in the same way, except I used the "Custom" button style. This image shows me what I did: As you can see, the buttons created for both the "button:Custom" and "Custom" styles look similar to the button that I created in the first step.  If you get an error when trying to create a new button from a button style, it might be because of the new Firefox version 60 which I have installed today. On a side note, I tried the same process and it didn't work using Google Chrome. This makes sense considering the new Firefox version 60 requires me to install a plugin to be able to use it. I found the plugin I needed from this page: Attention! Nitor is an brand new tool to enhance your laptop or computer performance. It is the tool to run all Windows.
