Read the following carefully. I've got a WLAN USB adapter antenna that brings wireless internet to computers that might not otherwise be able to receive an available wireless internet signal. The unit is black in color and housed in a plastic casing / shell. Realtek is the name of the unit or it is the name of the program that supports the unit. I got the unit from a friend who bought it off the internet. The unit came with a CD disc to download the wireless internet program into my computer. Amongst other things, it displays signal strength on the screen and available wireless internet signals to choose from in my reception area. Read the following carefully. If you are using Windows then it will only allow you to write to the boot partition (/boot). I wouldn't recommend storing anything else in the boot partition, but we can use it just to get this file onto the Pi so that we can get the network connection established.
