The Angel: The Egyptian Spy Who Saved Israel one of the most remarkable stories in the history of espionage was the story of richard sorge, a russian agent who secretly worked for the third reich. sorge, using a network of contacts he had built up in japan and china, was in a position to monitor a massive buildup of axis forces in the far east, and to pass that information to berlin. in other words, sorge was a spy with an unusual set of skills, who worked for the third reich. richard sorge was born in russia in 1890 and worked in the household of a german baroness. the baroness became suspicious of her employee, and soon found out that he was not working for the baroness' husband, but for a competing family. the baroness tried to entrap sorge by having him arrested on trumped-up charges. he was released. the baroness then offered him a job as a german agent. for two years he worked as a double agent.

but when he was promoted, sorge found that the money was not as good as the work was dangerous. he quit, and in the autumn of 1916 went to japan. sorge made friends with the japanese secret police and, with their help, was able to establish a network of agents in the japanese government. he was also able to establish a spy ring in china. he used them to monitor the preparations of the allies for an attack on russia. he was so effective that the german high command, which had used all its best agents in a vain attempt to defeat the allies, decided to turn to sorge. he was offered a huge salary by the german high command. at first he refused, preferring to work for the japanese. but he was captured in tokyo in may of 1917, and found himself imprisoned in the notorious evin prison in tehran, where he was tortured. he signed a confession and was sentenced to death.
