Stan Lee and Roger Corman's 12 page proposal to create Marvel comics was turned down over concerns it was too sophisticated, with Lee unable to convince the financier Corman to put in more than half a million dollars to actually make the movies. Lee had to pitch his ideas to DC Comics, which was more interested in creating their own characters. DC eventually gave Lee $50,000 to produce three separate feature-length Tarzan movies, using the auteur-director technique which was popular at the time. One of the movies was low budgeted, as $200,000 had to be spent to make the film.
