and, i think, if you learn something about yourself, you can learn something about the rest of your life. i don't think i'll ever fully recover from the loss of the people i was close to. i will always carry some of their experiences with me. i will always have a part of them with me. but i'm not sad anymore. i know that things happen. that's just how it is. i have accepted my fate. i have accepted that it is time for me to move on. and i'm okay with that. i know that i have something valuable to offer the world. i don't need to cling to the past. because i've found the future. i am who i am. and i like who i am. i am where i am. and i'm happy to be here.

the perceived effectiveness of counseling interventions for college students. cognitive restructuring, a common counseling technique, is used to modify a client's cognitive understanding of the issue under consideration and the emotions and behavior that are usually associated with it. this study examines the perceived effectiveness of cognitive restructuring on the effectiveness of a counseling intervention for college students. a sample of 254 college students who had received counseling in the past completed a series of measures, including a self-administered questionnaire that assessed their beliefs about the effectiveness of cognitive restructuring. a variety of measures of counseling were also administered to the sample. the results of a multiple regression analysis indicated that cognitive restructuring, the frequency of counseling sessions, and the length of counseling sessions were significantly related to beliefs about the effectiveness of cognitive restructuring. the results of the analysis also indicated that cognitive restructuring was more effective than less frequent counseling sessions or longer sessions.
