saját munkát kért: várnap este lefoglaltam a hétvégén egy dízelgombot, hogy lehajtom belőle a szemembe. Már nem volt részemre.

... I started Monday evening, 8:00 pm, on my way home from work.
With it being so hot weather I left my jacket at the office. I remember walking down the street and having to run as the heat was just too much.
I also remember passing a dry cleaner and I had to stop there to pick up my jacket. This was only a few blocks away from my apartment and I remember walking back home.
I kept my head down walking so as not to hit anyone, and I didn't feel like it. I was just hoping that I was not hit by a car. My apartment was quite a ways away and I remember walking there as the heat was getting to me. I didn't take my jacket off, but just kept it on. A person in their mid-20s who was exposed to people with flu symptoms at least once over the last week, or in contact with a chicken flock that showed signs of infection, had a much higher risk of getting an H5N6 infection, the Guardian has learned. How many people will need to be exposed to the virus to prompt a pandemic? Perhaps none - but if a pandemic does happen, this risky behaviour means that hospitals in areas affected will be struggling to cope, writes Tom Chambers, a microbiologist with the University of Leeds. “Pandemic flu can be highly infectious, far more so than seasonal flu,” said Chambers. “The virus is spread by infected people coughing or sneezing close to others, or through contact with contaminated surfaces.” Chambers was speaking to the Guardian at the US Centres for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta, where he was speaking about the spread of
