I'm using webpack as a bundler, and it worked fine for my code, but I realized that the added code to the React component does not seem to work when the file is served. I followed several tutorials online but none of them seem to talk about how to use webpack in React. So far I've put my code in the webpack entry point (entry.jsx) like this: `require('./source/jsx/user');` `console.log(global.user);` And in the user.jsx file, I imported the user namespace using this import line: `import { User } from './jsx/user';` However, if I went to my website and logged in I would just see an empty console, where the print statement should be. If instead of writing this print statement, I used the console statement there and it printed, I would have to write a route for this page or any other page. So how should I use webpack to make my React code work while keeping it DRY? A: webpack-dev-server is meant to be used to develop on localhost, rather than serving the actual website. Instead, you can run "yarn dev" to use webpack-dev-server and serve the site directly. You can start the dev server by running "yarn dev" To specify the port at which the dev server is running, type "" Example: `cd my-project yarn dev` Once you run the above command, you will be able to access your project's page through Graphene is a sheet of carbon atoms arranged in a single layer. The unique properties of graphene, such as optical transparency, high thermal conductivity, low weight, large surface area, and excellent mechanical strength, make it a very promising
