Adobe's Content-Aware feature introduced into version CS1 3.0 a decade ago. Content-Aware is designed to remove unwanted objects from photos, both in the background and from foreground objects. This allows you to clean up the background and place objects in the foreground. Also known as "the magic wand", this tool would easily be among the most powerful selection tools, if it weren't for the fact that objects might overlap one another. It's not especially intuitive, but it has an easy drag-and-drop method for selecting objects. Once the selection is made, you can smooth out the object's edges, or delete it if you'd like. In its initial version, it only worked with traditional images on Adobe IFF files.
